

Dad had a radio receiver like this in the store. On the picture of the store you can see the antenna. It was mounted on the top of about a 40 foot steel pipe pole behind the store.

During WWII we would listen to the news that was broadcast on the BBC. There would be other people from the community come in to also listen to the news.

He had a large speaker mounted in $\frac{3}{4}$ inch plywood in the front corner of the store.

Dad also had a record changer in the back room that was wireless and could be tuned in with this radio. He had a good many records of marches and I would go back and play a stack of them every once in awhile.
